JOB MARKET PAPER

Title: "Who Did the ACA Medicaid Expansion Impact? Using Linear Discriminant Analysis to Estimate the Probability of Being a Complier"

Abstract: What is the likelihood of being a complier in the ACA Medicaid expansion? Using linear discriminant analysis (LDA), I estimate how characteristics relating to socioeconomic status and race/ethnicity affect the likelihood that an individual will be a complier, defined as those induced by the expansion to obtain Medicaid coverage. Across multiple specifications, part-time and full-time workers are more likely than non-workers to be compliers. Not only is this result more prominent for Black individuals, but they also are more likely to be compliers compared to other racial/ethnic groups. This paper not only serves to identify the types of individuals who were directly impacted by the expansion, but it also introduces a new approach that combines complier analysis with techniques from machine learning.
